Two Wars.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 29.—Major General Joseph Wheeler was buried at Arlington cemetery today. All the morning the body lay in state in St. John's Episcopal church and was viewed by a continual stream of officials and citizens. The funeral services at two o'clock were attended by President Roosevelt, members of the cabinet and a large concourse of army and navy officers. The body was followed to Arlington by the men who fought under the gallant general in two wars and beneath two flags.

Brooklyn Yesterday—Body Was Wrapped in the Flags Which He Had Served.

New York, Jan. 29.—An imposing military pageant across the Brooklyn bridge and thence to St. Thomas' Episcopal church, Fifth avenue and 53rd street, and an escort across the North River ferries to Jersey City, where the body was placed on a train to be taken to Washington for interment in the National cemetery at Arlington, marked the funeral in this city yesterday of Gen. Joseph Wheeler, cavalry leader of the Confederacy and later one of the most prominent figures among the generals of the Spanish-American War. The body of the dead soldier was wrapped in the flags under which he had served—the stars and bars, and the stars and stripes. Veterans of the Southern and Northern armies mingled yesterday in paying tribute to General Wheeler with the younger veterans of the Cuban and Philippine campaigns. The route of the funeral cortege was lined with great crowds, most of whom stood with bare heads as the procession to the beat of muffled drums and strains of solemn funeral marches passed by. A riderless horse, with boots reversed in the stirrups and a cavalry sword hanging from the saddle was led just behind the caisson.

The church edifice was thronged. Seats had been reserved for members of the Southern society, the Confederate Veterans association, the Society of the War of 1812, several other organizations and the personal friends of the family. Reservations also had been made for the honorary pall bearers, the staff of Gen. Frederick D. Grant, U. S. A., and the officers of the escort. The altar of the church was almost hidden beneath the floral offerings, one among them a great wreath sent by President Roosevelt.

The brief services were conducted by the Rev. Ernest Sifers, rector of the church, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, who, meeting the body at the door, led the way to the chancel. They were followed by the church vestry. Following these, walking in pairs, were the honorary pall bearers.

Following the church services, the body was escorted to the West 23rd street ferry and thence to Jersey City, where it was placed on board a train of the Pennsylvania railroad which left for Washington shortly after four o'clock.

BUILDINGS DESTROYED
AT NAVAL STATIONFire Last Night at Newport, R. I., Destroyed $100,000 Worth of Property and Endangered a Valuable Old Warship.

Newport, R. I., Jan. 29.—Seven buildings connected with the United States naval training station at Coasters Harbor island, in this city, were destroyed by fire last night, causing an estimated loss of $100,000. The buildings destroyed were the detention building, machine shop, paint shop, paymaster's storehouse, carpenter shops and two small storehouses.

The work of a bucket brigade which was formed, was of no avail against the fire, as a strong northwest wind sprang up and threatened to carry the flames to nearly every quarter of the reservation. Aid from the Newport fire department was then asked.

At this time the paymaster's office and storehouse were burning fiercely, but the men and boys managed to make their way into the building and save part of the stores. The safe was opened by the paymaster and all the money and official documents were removed and placed under a guard of marines.

One of the burned buildings contained all of the small boats and cutters used for practice purposes at the station. These boats had been hauled from the water when winter set in and had been stored in the building. All were destroyed.

Several apprentices in single irons were confined in the detention building at the time the fire broke out. Physical instructor Joseph Kirby liberated them by a heroic effort. When he reached the detention building, he could not see the young prisoners, on account of the smoke, but they answered to his call. Supported by a line of men, Kirby made his way to the spot where the boys were in confinement and passed them back one by one to the men behind him and so out to the sea wall. In passing over the sea wall, two of the manacled boys fell overboard, but were immediately rescued. They were sent to the barracks for the remainder of the night.

For a time the famous old frigate Constellation, which is used as a practice ship at the station, was in danger of destruction, but prompt work on the part of the firemen saved the vessel. A shift of the wind a few minutes later removed all danger.

Providing for Municipal Ownership of Street Railways.

If the ordinance passes popular vote, the mayor expects to test cases of the Mueller law, under which money will be secured to buy roads and equipment and also fears the present traction systems will oppose municipalization, but rests content in the belief that his plans will be realized within 15 months.

Christian IX was 88 years of age, having been born April 5, 1818, being by birth Duke of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg. He succeeded to the throne of Denmark by virtue of treaty and the law of the Danish succession on the death of his kinsman, Frederick VII, in 1903, thus having reigned for 43 years. They had six children, Alexandra, the queen of Great Britain and Ireland, the king of the Hellenes, the dowager empress of Russia, the duchess of Cumberland and Prince Waldemar.

Several stories are current as to the cause of the king's death. One of them is the effect that a soldier got into a dispute with three Danish civilians. A quarrel followed and as it progressed the king, who was in the room, stepped in and tried to settle the matter. He was struck on the head by one of the civilians and fell. He was taken to the hospital and died.

An hour later, Harwood appeared at his home in Bigelow street, entered the home of Mrs. Montgomery, whom he knocked down with the butt of his revolver. He then entered his own house, taking a shotgun and a revolver, and barricaded himself. Up to a late hour late night he had held out for a squad of policemen who surrounded the house. MAY DIE FROM INJURIES.

Head Physician for Modern Woodmen
Was Badly Hurt.

Burlington, Jan. 29.—State Deputy A. O. Palmer of the Modern Woodmen returned Saturday evening from Hartford, where he went to see Dr. E. A. Barrows, head physician, M. W. A., for the state of Vermont. Dr. Barrows underwent a serious operation Saturday at his home in Hartford and is in a very critical condition.

Seven physicians participated in the operation, which was made necessary by intestinal injuries received by Dr. Barrows in a runaway accident last Wednesday. He was driving down a steep hill in Hartford when one of the hold-backs broke and the vehicle struck the horse, which immediately took fright and went down the hill at a terrific rate of speed. At the foot of the hill was a sharp turn in the road. The horse, being unable to make this turn, dashed over a 20-foot embankment into the railroad yard below, carrying the wagon and Dr. Barrows along with it. In addition to the serious intestinal injury which he received, the doctor also sustained three broken ribs, and it was little short of a miracle that he was not killed outright.

IN A STREET FIGHT.

Soldiers and Civilians Mixed It Up at Winoski.

Winoski, Jan. 29.—Several persons, residents of Winoski, with a few soldiers, got into one of the fiercest fights yesterday afternoon that has been witnessed in this vicinity for a long time. A crowd of 200 persons witnessed the battle, which took place near the Burlington flouring mill and which resulted in four of the participants receiving ugly cuts and bruises.

Several stories are current as to the cause of the row. One of them is the effect that a soldier got into a dispute with three Burlington civilians. A quarrel followed and as it progressed the soldiers and civilians entered, until there were six distinct fights, with 10 participants. Electric car traffic was blocked and everything held up until a powerful man with more sense than the others stepped in and took a hand. A request was telephoned to Burlington for a deputy sheriff, but he arrived on the scene after the fight was over. The soldiers were put on an electric car and taken to the fort, being badly cut about the face. The civilians seemed to have received the most punishment, as their cuts were more in number and uglier.

LEARNED HIS MISTAKE.

Three of the Machines Seized and One of the Keepers at Once Pleaded Guilty to Running Gambling Device.

Northfield, Jan. 29.—A tall young man with the appearance of a theologian dropped casually into the hunch room of William Dawson, better known as "Hard Luck Billy" at Northfield Saturday afternoon, and with an inquiring look walked up to a machine which bore the pleasant name of the "New Century Musical Puck." Across the top of the machine were the words "This is not a gambling device." With an expression in which native innocence and acquired inquisitiveness were beautifully blended, the tall young man asked the affable man behind the counter:

"What's this?"

"O, that's a music-box," was the reply. Then, turning to his subject, he went on to tell in confidence how there was something besides music in it. The tall young man got interested, and the clerk volunteered to explain the practical workings of the machine, how you dropped in a nickel and played the machine, and if you didn't have a nickel you bought a supply of checks and dropped them in. The tall young man who looked as if he might have been a theologian bought twenty-five cents' worth of checks.

He dropped in one of the checks, and the obliging clerk worked the machine, meanwhile elaborating on the details of the instrument. Two checks came out. "What do you do with these?" came the tall young man's next question most naturally.

"Well, if you want to, you can get 'em cashed at the counter,"

But flushed by his first success the young man decided to try his fortunes again. The next time nothing came, and the next and the next.

"See here, how's this; the sign up there reads 'This is not a gambling device,' and I've played three times and didn't get a thing!"

"Well, you see, you're supposed to give five cents' worth of music every time you play," came the answer, and with wonderful alacrity the clerk sprang to the crank and fifteen cents' worth of music was ground out in short order.

At this point the stranger pulled a paper and pencil out of his pocket and with a few many-relatives-did-he-leave sort of expression said:

"Young man, what's your name?"

The obliging clerk opened his eyes wide, but gave the desired information. "Now, what's your boss' name?" was the next interrogation in guttural gun fashion.

The information was like wringing tears from a sphinx, but it came.

The tall young man carefully folded the paper to make the corners fit, put the pencil in his pocket and walked out. One minute later Chief of Police Hutchinson, walked in and informed the clerk that the musical Puck machine would be his property for a period at least.

The tall young man, who might have been a theologian but wasn't, was State's Attorney Jackson of Barre. He was 20 cents out on the deal with nothing but a check bearing the words "Good for five cents at the bar" to show for it.

In a short time two similar machines were rounded up, one at the Northfield House and another in barber Clark's shop under the hotel, and a hearing had been set for today to determine whether they came within the definition of gambling devices. However, M. E. Yarrington, proprietor of the hotel didn't wait for the hearing on the machines but pleaded guilty at once to keeping a gambling machine. He paid a fine of $50, with costs bringing the total up to $60.

The raids were made on a complaint on one place, and the State's attorney thought he might as well make the job thorough. The "New Century Musical Puck" machine is made by the Antonio machine company of Fitchburg, Mass., the same firm which turned out the famous "Klondike" machine that was recently introduced in Vermont.

Before Justice Kent this forenoon the machines were condemned and ordered destroyed. Charles A. Clark, who runs the barber shop, pleaded guilty to keeping a gambling device, as did "Hard Luck Billy" Dawson, who was in Barre at the time of the raid. Their fines were $50 each, with costs amounting to $60. W. A. Lord of Montpelier was counsel for Clark.

The game was fast from start to finish and is said to have been the roughest seen in Montpelier this season, being full of slugging and all kinds of foul play, chiefly on the part of Montpelier. W. Bullock of the visiting team was laid out for three minutes by rough play. For the home team Peck was the star, playing fast, clean ball, while for Burlington Kiesel, W. Bullock and R. Bullock did the best playing.
